

LACK OF HELP TO HANDLE THE TRAFFIC

TUCSON, May 7.—The heavy stock movement of the past week have so congested freight traffic on the western end of the Southern Pacific out of Tucson during the past week that it has been found impossible to secure enough men to handle the stock trains and the regular traffic of the road and there is a shortage of help which the railway officials are seeking to supply. It is said by the importation of new crews. Two heavy stock trains are leaving Tucson almost every day now, and will continue to be sent out. If it is possible to secure sufficient trainmen, until the end of the stock season is here. The company, it is claimed, has been seriously handicapped in the operation of its rolling stock and the movement of its freight business on this account during the past week, during which time the stock shipments have been in progress out of this city.

It is estimated that fully 2500 head of steers have already been shipped out of Tucson, most of them coming from the Wilcox and the Patagonia sections. The end is not yet in sight, and the Southern Pacific officials are not in a position to state just how many more cars will be required for the stock movement of the city. It is said to be certain, however, that it will be the heaviest year ever known here.

All the stock out of this city is being shipped to California points. The local officials expect to be kept busy with stock shipments for some time to come, as the stockmen in Chihuahua, Mexico, will begin their livestock shipments in July, continuing throughout the greater portion of August. A large percentage of the stock raised in that section is shipped to California, passing through Tucson. It is estimated that not less than 500 cars of steers will be shipped through this city, from that section during the coming season.

Railroad officials report that the present business of the road is the heaviest experienced in a long time.

WOMAN AND FASHION CHOICE MISCELLANY

The Taffeta Frock.

If you have a taffeta jumper frock, either black or colored, that has been cast aside as hopelessly out of date, make use of it as soon as you can. There is no use of laying taffeta away, as it cuts on every fold.

Naturally both the style and the material of this frock is out of style, but it can be combined with another material into a stylish and useful frock.

In this season it is possible to pick up velvets, plushes, cashmeres or other soft wool materials for little money. Get something to match closely the color of the silk.

Cut the skirt of the jumper frock into a deep yoke on the sides and long front panel. This should be corded or finished with soutache braid, and underneath should be put an accordion or side plaited skirt of velvet or other woolen fabric. The rest of the skirt can be cut into narrow bands, which should be applied to the skirt before it is plaited.

Fill in the yoke part with the velvet heavily embroidered with large designs in soutache braid and black embroidered silk. Bring folds of the velvet over the shoulders front and back in full effect, cutting them above the waist line with a shield shaped piece of braided taffeta.

Cut the jumper sleeves into small, close fitting caps split up the middle and strapped across with bands of the silk. Underneath put sleeves of the velvet, slightly puffed at elbow and crossed with stitched bands of the silk. Stretched bands of the taffeta can outline the top of velvet collar.

Morning Frock of Gingham.

A little suggestion in the way of a practical morning dress for the woman who must be her own maid is given today. This little dress, while giving perfect freedom and being simplicity itself, is neat, trim and really pretty. It was made of striped gingham, the use of bias bands, thus causing the stripes to run diagonally, being the sole trimming. Two suspender pieces cut in this fashion cross the shoulders and are continued on either side of the front bodice of the skirt. Another outlines the lower edge of the yoke. The last is white lawn, with collar of the same tucked and headed by a band of the striped material.

The Smart Spring Shoe.

In spring footwear there are many pretty models from which to choose. Pumps in every style and color, but on a broad, comfortable last, will again be the mode, and the summer promises still more models with a great license as to color.

Natural tan and also black calf boots, buttoned or laced, continue to be the chosen kind for tramp and morning use, while slippers for evening wear seem more beautiful and elaborate than ever before. For adornment buckles are in vogue, and these range from dainty metal ones to expensive and costly jeweled ones.

For the evening a woman can have as many pairs of slippers as she has gowns, all to match in color and material.

They may be embroidered, beaded, or even hand painted, no limit being on either the elaborateness or price. Where only one pair at a time may be possessed, black satin is always correct and exceedingly dainty.

New Kimono Sleeve.

The sleeves of the new kimono and study negligees are put in quite differently from the old time sleeve with its point hanging on the underside of arm from the elbow.

The new sleeve is a diamond shaped piece made very short and inserted in the armhole so that the point falls up on top of arm midway between the shoulders and the elbow.

As this gives full protection to the arm than the old cut, there is generally an underlay of lace, soft mull edged with ruffles of lace or of all over net.

This underlay is made either to gather into a band and form a loose puff or is a series of ruffles reaching to the elbow, loose, but not very full.

The Duchess Paid.

One of the cleverest bridge players and one of the biggest gamblers in London society is a dapper duchess. I have heard it said that she makes $5,000 a year between her skill at cards and luck on the turf, but her private income is so large that no one could suspect her for a moment of being dependent on her winnings. Her grace, by the way, is a very bad loser and has a well known objection to paying her losses. She lost on one occasion $70 to a foreign attaché and said she would send him a check for the amount the next day. The check did not arrive, however, and the diplomat, who knew the duchess well, called on her a couple of days later in the afternoon.

"You have come for your money, of course," said her grace, rather grimly, as she handed her visitor tea.

"I came to see your grace," replied the diplomatist, with a laugh, "but now that you remind me of your debt I shall remain to receive the money." And he got paid.—London M. A. P.

The "Juicy Sirloin" a Delusion.

Writing on the nutritive value of meat in the Metropolitan Magazine, E. T. Brewster says: "The facts set forth in a recent government publication will make the householder open his eyes. The cheaper cuts of meat, which contain a good deal of fat, are fairly nutritious. A pound of beef side or mutton shoulder will yield upward of a thousand of the two or three thousand calories of nutriment which the average person needs to carry him through the day's business. The tender, juicy sirloin—the juice being mostly water—which we pay 30 and 35 cents a pound for, is good for only 850 or 880 calories. Even this little is partly due to the fat, for even where there is no visible fat there is always in a well fed animal a good deal concealed in the muscle fiber. Really lean meat, which popular opinion makes so especially nutritious, actually contains only 520 calories of nutriment to the pound. Contrast this with olive oil, a pure vegetable fat, which runs above 4,000 calories."
